Summary of Guadium et Spes – Pastoral Constitution on the Church in the Modern World

By: Deacon Ed Sheffer

Cardinal Montini stood before the Second Vatican Council and stated: The Church is nothing by itself. It is not so much that the Church has Christ but that Christ has the Church to carry on his work of bringing salvation to all.

The Pastoral Constitution on the Church was prepared with the purpose in mind to provide both Christians and non-Christians with some understanding of deep insights into the world and to raise a consciousness to the need to improve it. No document of Vatican II changed so radically: there were four complete rewrites. Many questions were raised, so that the Church and society might work together to resolve them. The Fathers of Vatican II labored very hard at trying to get a better grasp of humanity and comprehend the deeper responsibilities of being human: What is God’s plan for humanity?

Clearly, humans were not created to live for themselves, life rests in relationships. To live more fully, the priority of life is to be focused on truth, justice, freedom, and love. Christ established the Church to serve humanity in this pursuit and to help those who seek holiness. In the end life is about sharing the mystery of God’s awesome love.

Document Summary
The unchangeable truths are: the world is God’s creation and is sustained by God, and the world was freed from sin by Christ and is continually recreated and brought to its destiny under the power of the Holy Spirit. In light of the Gospel, the Church is to offer the human race the saving resources given to it by Christ. The Church is to seek to provide meaningful answers to the questions people have about life.

The creative energies of people and their intellect produce social transformation, some good and some bad. There is a spiritual deficiency in the world. Societies are rapidly being transformed. People want things to happen now, they are not satisfied in waiting and in many cases don’t mature at a rate equal to what they desire. Traditions and values are being lost. Moral conflicts are escalating as a result of a false way of living, and people’s moral conscience is playing less and less of a role. Oppression and neglect for the poor is escalating. This is at the heart of the world’s mistrust and division. The world is capable of acts that uplift life and acts that destroy life. This situation is rooted in ambition. There is an addiction to material things. In the end material things will never provide lasting happiness. Yet, there are many who desire to know what the purpose of life is. The Church believes that in pursuing Christ we can find answers to this question. Finding answers to life’s problems rests in Jesus. Lying beneath all chaos rests the unchanging and loving God.

Part One – The Church and Man’s Vocation
We must try and understand the needs, events, and desires of the world. Who are we? What do we need to do better as a society? What do the actions and thoughts of the world mean? How can the world better fulfill God’s will? How can I?

Chapter One – The Dignity of the Human Person
The dignity of being human stems from being created in God’s image. This image is severely damaged by sin and purchased back at a heavy price by Christ.
We are composed of body and soul; we are to love them both. We progress as we seek heavenly truth, seeing beyond what our eyes reveal. There is a law of love written in our heart. There is an inner voice that calls us to love God and humanity. We have an ability to choose God or not. Not choosing God is what in the end eliminates that which binds us to God. Some deny the existence of God, some don’t care if there is a God or not, and some are so proud that their ego allows for little faith in God. The truth of life rests in the mystery of God. In Christ sorrow and death take on meaning. In following Jesus we learn to love in such a way that our truest self is revealed.

Chapter Two – The Community of Mankind
We find our truest self when we seek what is good not only for us, but for all. The progress of one life goes hand-in-hand with the progress of society. Economies, politics, and the pursuit of social status contribute to much of the conflict in the world. The inherent nature of these can often breed pride and selfishness. This can only be overcome with the help of grace. Good prevails when people have access to food, clothing, shelter, freedom, the right to have a family or not, employment, education, a sound name, privacy, to follow one’s conscience, and a choice to choose God or not. Society improves based on truth, and survives on justice and love. Those most in need must be heard, and that great need should disturb the conscience of humanity. Life is to be preserved and elevated at all cost. We must learn to love and respect those who think differently than us. In accepting them we should seek to understand, and in understanding we can seek out truth. Those we know to be in error are to be loved even more fervently. We never have the right to judge the heart of another. Many will seek to elevate their stature in life, but the truth is there is basic equality in all humanity. Each of us is responsible to fulfill the call to live justly and to walk in love always. God created us to be social, and we are bound together.

Chapter Three – Man’s Activity in the Universe
Through work we can develop ourselves as individuals. A person though is truly valued by who they are, not by what they do. It is also true that whatever is done to promote justice and dignity is infinitely more valuable than what is technologically created. Peace is threatened wherever self-centeredness exists. The hope of the world rests in love.

Chapter Four – The Role of the Church
The Church is the sign of the presence of God. The Church exists because of God’s love for us. Unity is to be sought through the Church. God leads us to His truth. Through the Word of God the Church proclaims the rights of humankind. Divine law always has precedence over human laws. The Church’s greatest responsibility and challenge is to promote and attain unity. One cannot separate faith from secular life. When we disagree, we should not attempt to persuade someone as if we are speaking for God and His Church. We need to enter into honest discussion with mutual love and respect. Christ was, is, and always will be the center of the Church.

Part Two – Some More Urgent Problems
Five priorities of concern: Marriage and family, human culture, social-political and economic life, bonds among nations, and war and peace.

Chapter One – The Dignity of Marriage and the Family
Marriage promotes a healthy human society. Society is harmed by polygamy, divorce, free-love, excessive self-love, and improper use of birth control. Sacramental married life is a covenantal love of man and woman, created by God. All Sacraments are a sign of God’s faithful love and are sources of grace. Love in marriage is divinely ordained love and is expressed through holy sex and lived out in raising a family. The intimate love of marriage is expressed and perfected through sexual intercourse. The Church rejects the taking of any life, including the abortion of a fetus. All life comes from God and is sacred. To raise children best, a father should be fully present as well as a nurturing mother.

Chapter Two – Proper Development of Culture
Culture implies community living. Growth in natural human and social science, as well as communications and technology, provide a means to change culture positively and negatively. There are many challenging and difficult questions facing the world: How do we blend knowledge with realized truths, in order that this knowledge does not become an end in itself, but rather leads to true wisdom? How do we separate ourselves from aspects of culture that do not lead to God and promote humanism? Faith and culture have many of the same goals. They both can elevate humanity through goodness and beauty. However, faith points people toward divine life of truth and justice. The Church will never be bound to culture or any period of history. The Church must remain faithful to its traditions and be responsive to its universal mission. If a culture is to be of value, it must provide people freedom to search for truth, to speak out, and to openly express beliefs. The way truths of faith are expressed often determine how well they take root.

Chapter Three – Economic and Social Life
There is more than enough available to the world to provide for the needs of humanity. Those consumed by the enhancement of their own personal lives is what mostly prevents those in dire need from having what will sustain them. The purpose of currency and material resources is not to gain wealth for wealth’s own sake, or to dominate others. A just world seeks to provide opportunity for all to grow intellectually and morally. The act of work is a greater value to a human being than to seek material wealth. Through work one should have the ability to support themselves and their family. Work is how we can serve one another, too. There should be an incentive in place for one to have private ownership and private control over their possessions.

Chapter Four – The Political Community
Authority is required in society in order to prevent people from persecuting others. Authority must function as a moral force and not as a tyranny. Governments exist for the sake of people. People should always have a voice in choosing those who represent them, and it is the duty of citizens to actively vote for their leaders. The laws of society must protect the rights of people. However, when a government takes on too much authority it weakens the sense of responsibility individuals, families, and groups must take ownership for. Citizens should be loyal to their country, but not at the expense of becoming blind to the needs of people in the world. The truest duty politically is to oppose injustice, oppression, and intolerance. Church and government are rightly independent and self-governing. The work of the Church is to preach the faith and teach social doctrines. The Church has the right and responsibility to pass moral judgments on society when the salvation of souls is at stake.

Chapter Five – Fostering Peace
Peace is not the absence of war. True peace is of God, it involves the harmony of people and pursuing justice. Peace is directly relevant to people’s ability to love. Peace will never be obtained or maintained unless people can trust and share. Peace requires sincere respect for others and an effort to see that the basic human needs of others is met. Peace flows from Christ. Governments have a legitimate right to defend themselves. They have a duty to protect their citizens. No nation is free to choose to wage war for gain in any way. Blind obedience to a nation is never an excuse to destroy populated areas. The destruction of inhabited areas of people is a crime against God and humanity. Peace is not possible where these exist: injustice, economic inequality, thirst for power, or disregard for human life. The escalating population in the world is a serious concern and should be addressed. The solution to this problem must agree with moral law.

Conclusion
All that is stated in Guadium et Spes is rooted in the Gospel. The Church recognizes that it needs to engage others with more pronounced goodwill, and to embrace those who do not believe in Christ but also desire peace. Christians have the greater responsibility to introduce love to the world. The love we give must seek to be rooted in the love we receive from Christ. When we seek to have Christ present in all we do, the love of Christ is revealed.

Final Comments
The world has changed significantly since the Second Vatican Council. Technology and globalization are but a few of the vehicles by which change is taking place at a very rapid pace. In addition, there is now an instantaneous ability to communicate and connect to people anywhere in the world. In light of this and what the Second Vatican Council shared fifty years ago one would hope there would be less injustice in the world. The reality is there is a growing imbalance between those who have and those who don’t. In an effort to seek and improve their countries’ economic status (and to line the pockets of certain people in power), some underdeveloped countries are allowing affluent countries to enter into their country to establish a global presence, their purpose being to pursue greater wealth and to monopolize resources. In too many cases ecological destruction is taking place to these countries.

Most cultures in the world no longer have a true focus on Christ. In many of these cultures Christian identity is being lost because people have stopped meditating on reality. Most of the world’s cultures teach that accomplishing and possessing more defines a successful life, and most people fear losing what they have. The focus is not on who I am, but on what I do, and the need to gain more materially. In our own culture there is tremendous divisiveness growing politically, socio-economically, and to a certain extent religiously. Imitating Christ is becoming more removed from the Christian’s equation. Life is not really about being faithful to God, or trying to become the truest Christian one can become.

The United States Catholic Bishops have identified a list of issues that are distorting God’s plan for humanity. These are some of the issues that relate to the disconnect from God: abortion, agricultural policies, capital punishment, education, foreign aid, health care, human rights, immigration reform, military spending, poverty, morality, religious freedom, and the sacredness of marriage between a man and a woman. The thing we all would do well to remember is that the Church’s primary mission is to evangelize. Evangelization isn’t about trying to win anybody over to the Catholic Team. Specifically, evangelization involves revealing the person of Christ, in order to lead people to the central truths. It involves proclaiming Christ with our entire being: physical, intellectual, emotional, and spiritual self.

You see, salvation rests in Christ and in him we find our truest self. In this regard, we all play a role in trying to point people one-by-one to Christ. The strongest critics say: The Church is undergoing her worst crisis since the Arian heresy ... Vatican II has set off neo-modernism. ... The fruit is bad so the tree is bad. It is an instrument of Satan. I say they are dead wrong. I say we must become much more spiritually mature. I say there must be much greater loyalty given by all Catholics to the Vicar of Christ. I say the lack of these two things have contributed greatly to the spirit of Vatican II not being lived out more. I say that we need to stop just accepting what is convenient and advantageous. I say that life needs to be about connecting to holiness and becoming a part of it. Life needs to stop being about what I do and what I have, and become about who I am becoming. I say life needs to become much more about seeking the truth and cultivating the soul.

Christ is the one who offers us hope and joy, for he gives true meaning to life. Translated; Guadium et Spes translates into Hope and Joy! The laborious and serious work of Vatican II was unmistakably touched by the Holy Spirit. Vatican II still challenges us to discover who we are. It promised hope and joy! It centered us on becoming more by centering one’s self on Christ, in and through his Church. For the Catholic Church is not a purely human reality or product; it is fundamentally a work of God. The Church is a mystery because it is, like Jesus Christ and Sacred Scripture, a union of the divine and the human. It will never be a mere human organization as some want to paint it. The Church will be a mystery because its membership includes not only followers of Jesus on earth but also those who are with Christ in heaven.

Obviously, there is a whole lot of becoming left for us all. There is a journey to get back on, and there is a whole lot of hope and joy to be experienced. This hope and joy of the world rests in love – God’s love and aiming to mirror it!

If you care to read Guadium et Spes, or any of the other Vatican II Documents, the official Vatican website is: http://www.vatican.va/archive/hist_councils/ii_vatican_council/index.htm